The Space Shuttle

The pretty, colourful galaxy drifted past me as I glided through space in my shuttle. In the distance, I could see glowing, twinkling spheres sparkling at me.

Eventually, I slept and all I could hear was the sound of buttons beeping and my own breathing. My mouth felt so dry. I felt very alone.

The bright, dazzling sun made my eyes open. I saw a giant, blue marble with white swirls. My home.

My shuttle started shaking violently, and my whole body vibrated. I could feel the burning heat around me as I return home. I felt excited and terrified. Finally, I had landed.

Carefully, I looked around and could smell the fresh, crisp air, but it no longer looked like my home. What has happened?
